SOUTH SALEM GRAVESTONE INSCRIPTIONS.

In 1908 I published the pamphlet Old Churchyard Inscriptions, South Salem, Westchester Co., New York, which is now about out of print. Planning a new edition, Judge Webster has made the pertinent suggestion that I should include the inscriptions upon the older stones in the Keeler and Mead Street burying grounds and in the Cemetery. For even in the latter several stones are broken, several inscriptions are already difficult to read entirely, and there are two unmarked graves of soldiers.

Since 1908 there have been six interments in the churchyard.[1] And as there may be no more, I have included the new inscriptions, besides correcting several errors that occurred in the earlier pamphlet. But inasmuch as interments are made in the two burying grounds from time to time, and more frequently in the cemetery, I have copied in these only the stones down to 1900, that being a convenient year at which to stop. Exceptions are a few recent stones giving two or more names, and at least one date prior to 1901. From these I have copied the entire inscriptions. Perhaps in time someone else may extend the record.

But in stopping at 1900 I feel regret that is real if sentimental. For since then many of my old friends have been laid at rest, some of them men that were very prominent in our town's affairs. Nor will there appear the name of Stanley Russell, whom I had known from early childhood, who died during the Great War in the service of his country, and was the first of the soldiers of that war to be buried in South Salem.

THE CHURCHYARD.

Since 1908 there have been six interments in the churchyard, and one stone has been placed at a grave of 1900 not before marked. The six inscriptions have been added to those reproduced in 1908.

Undoubtedly the churchyard contains many unmarked graves; and probably most, possibly all of the space in which there are no stones has been used for interments. When the new horse sheds were built and necessary excavation was in process at the southeastern edge of the churchyard, in 1906, a grave was disturbed. And again a few years later, when digging at the southwest edge, the workers found another.

The church was organized in 1752 by the Rev. Solomon Mead, affectionately called Priest Mead, and was incorporated in 1785 under its present legal name, the Presbyterian Church and Congregation of the Town of Lower Salem. The first deed to the churchyard was given in 1760 by Thomas Rockwell for £3 York money ($7.50). It is probable that the ground had been used as a place of burial for half a century, and that this deed was given only to convey a clear title. In 1784 Thomas Rockwell deeded quarter of an acre more, perhaps including the spot where the church now stands.[1]

The first stones were merely flat rough ones bearing no inscriptions, for there was no stone cutter in the village.

[1] Judge Joseph A. Webster's History of the Presbyterian Church of South Salem, 1902. This contains pictures of the church of 1826, and as it was in 1872. Also Bolton's History of Westchester County, under Lewisboro.

Perhaps one of the first cut stones is that on the grave of Mary, wife of Nathan Northrup, and bearing the name and address of the maker. This was probably brought from Newark, N. J., by vessel to Norwalk, Conn., and then on a horse's back to South Salem.

The first building on the present site was erected some time before 1760. That building stood until 1826, when a new "meeting house" was erected, the frame of which still stands. The church of 1826 had two rows of windows with blinds, and two entrance doors. Inside were two aisles with a double row of seats through the middle, and there were seats at the sides reaching to the walls. Galleries extended around three sides of the building; and the high pulpit at the south end was reached by steps at each side. All this was changed in 1872, when the building assumed its present appearance.

For over a century the people of the village were buried in this graveyard.

THE KEELER BURYING GROUND.

This was originally a portion of the graveyard of the Episcopal Church, now St. John's. The early history of the property is uncertain. It is said to have been sold to the church by Timothy Keeler; but a contradictory tradition asserts that the parcel was given by James Brown, Proprietor Brown, the reputed donor of the "Parsonage Lands."[1]

The records of the parish of Salem date from early in the eighteenth century; but the first church within the town was built in 1771. It stood just west of the burying ground, which was probably then larger than the present walls indicate. With the Revolution the Church of England service became decidedly unpopular with the majority of the community, the parson was a Tory, and the church was closed from 1776; nor was the parish reorganized until 1810. During the Revolution the church was used as a hospital and then was converted into a tavern, for years known as the Church Tavern. In 1796 it and the land were conveyed to Jeremiah Keeler, Sergeant Keeler, who removed the building and used much of the material in constructing his house, across the road.[2]

The Episcopalians decreased for half a century and the neglected gravestones slowly disintegrated or fell and have disappeared. But the Keelers continued to bury in their corner of the former churchyard. In 1857 Thaddeus H.

[2] Bolton, I, 422, 423. The house remains, altered, and is the farmhouse upon the property of the late Mr. Crafts, now Mr. Kaplan's.

Keeler, son of Jeremiah, built the present walls about the plot.[1] And in 1858 he rearranged the older graves in the circle as they now are, erecting the central column, which bears the date.

THE MEAD STREET BURYING GROUND.

The early history of this ground is unknown to me. It is manifest that the Meads of Mead Street buried here from the settlement of Col. Enoch Mead at the beginning of the Revolution. He came into the town about 1776, and in 1780 built the house now belonging to Mr. and Mrs. Brooke. Likewise the eldest line of the Lawrences, who were here prior to the Revolution. And of course the Hunts, who came from North Salem soon after the Revolution. About 1904 the George W. Mead family enlarged the ground on the west by adding land from their property, and the wall enclosing this portion on the north, south and west was then built. In 1925 Mr. Lawrence Mead and Mr. Herbert Mead have purchased from the Hunts a strip 40 feet wide and the depth of the burying ground, and added that to the ground on the north; moving the north wall and extending the west wall.

The burying ground remains a neighborhood interest, and there is neither an incorporation nor trustees.

SOUTH SALEM CEMETERY.

The need of a cemetery at South Salem became apparent seventy years ago, when it was realized that most of the space in the churchyard was already occupied, and only such remained as might receive persons then living, whose parents, husbands or wives were already buried there.[1] Accordingly we find in the town records that in 1854 a committee was appointed to price land. The following year a committee was directed to effect purchase. And on March 25, 1856, the latter committee reported the purchase of two acres from Stephen Hoyt, for $600.[2]

The town board appointed three trustees to receive the conveyance of land and to care for the same.[3] The trustees proceeded to draw up regulations; and several plots were promptly sold.

This cemetery is peculiar [4] in that it is town property, administered by trustees regularly elected by the voters of the town, and is not an incorporated entity. Plots are sold for moderate sums, there being no commercial purpose, and necessary care is given to plots of families that are not now represented in the countryside.

[1] I have found no documentary evidence for this statement; but my supposition is supported by the positive assertion of Mr. Henry L. St. John, our town clerk, and one of the cemetery trustees. 1924.

[2] The minutes of this town meeting are dated April 25 at the heading, but March 25 below. March is correct. The annual meeting of the preceding year had adjourned to the following March. The usual time had been changed in 1854.

[3] By the same resolutions land was purchased for the cemeteries at Cross River and Lewisboro; doubtless for the same reason. The first trustees were Jeremiah Howe, Cyrus M. Ferris and Stephen G. Howe.

[4] In common with those of Cross River and Lewisboro.
